ASK THAT NO EXHIBIT BE REMOVED BEFORE 5 P.M.

Grande Prairie and District School Fair Association asks that students, parents and teachers should be reminded that no exhibits be removed before 5 p.m. as the general public will be allowed to view all exhibits.

Parents and children interested in the forthcoming school fairs are asked to note that where the Bulletin Supplement states that sections 18-27 are to be deleted this means only 18 and 27 are to be omitted and not those sections in between.

Secretaries are asked that this be made known as widely as possible to teachers and pupils, before the opening of the School Fair.

Twenty Bushel Average Crop at Ft. St. John

Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Pickett and E. R. MacEwen of Fort St. John were weekend visitors to the Grande Prairie.

In conversation with a representative of The Tribune, Mr. MacEwen said that the wheat crop in the Fort St. John country should average about 20 bushels to the acre.

In answer to a question regarding the number of cattle in the district, Mr. MacEwen replied that there was considerable stock in the country. One man, he stated, shipped in 200 head of beef cattle in a single week. Notwithstanding that there was a shortage of moisture at one period of the season, there was plenty of hay and all stock was in excellent condition.

Mr. Thompson was born in Wisconsin in 1880. He spent his early life farming in Minnesota, where he married Miss Annie Sturgeon and moved to Hardin, Wash., where his wife died, leaving five children.

After 1912, with his three sons, he came to the Peace River country near the Edson Trail, and took up land near the present site of Dimisdale. Later he bought more land.

The late Mr. Thompson was always a booster for the Peace River country and was widely and favorably known in the Peace River district.

In the fall of 1912 he sold out and moved to Boise, Idaho.

Recent in Boise he is survived by five children—Lila Fitzpatrick of Billings, Mont.; Lila Carsten of Bismarck, Wash.; Hugh, Ashley and Rowe, all of the Peace River district;—a daughter, Mrs. Sturgeon, who lives in Seattle, and twelve grandchildren. Two brothers were killed in action in the Civil War.

A petition for the extension of the telephone line from Deloit to Sturgeon Lake is being circulated and the matter was left in the hands of a committee to be acted upon.

Another suggestion was that all Esperantists take part in the reception to His Excellency, Earl Bessborough, governor-general of Canada, and Lady Bessborough, on the occasion of their visit to Peace River.

A motion to adjourn was then made. Officers of the Grande Prairie Esperantists are: G. Vidano, honorary president; Miss Helen Bromley, president; Miss Helen Sturgeon, vice-president; Miss Betty McQuarrie, treasurer; and Mrs. W. P. Riley, secretary.

Next meeting will be held on September 15, at 8 o'clock, commencing September 13. The membership fee is very low, ten cents a week being the amount paid Tuesday night's meeting.

To interest local business men, Mr. Fowler was appointed delegate to Grande Prairie Board of Trade.

MacEwen was also asked to visit Esperanto groups at Beaveridge and Hythe and to act in the capacity of liaison officer with the Esperanto organizations there.

Reference was made on the Canadian Esperantist was divided up into the various worker, writer and speaker, and to continue as leader, with Miss Betty McQuarrie, Miss Helen Bromley, Miss Helen Sturgeon, and MacEwen as assistants.

MacEwen was also asked to assist in giving lectures on Esperanto during the winter months. MacEwen was also asked to assist in giving lectures on Esperanto during the winter months.

Many letters to the club were read from outside points, some containing suggestions for the Esperantists, and all indicating that much interest was being taken in the work of the local organization.

All the individual members have received the new literature and the work of the local organization.

RECAPITULATION

By O. B. HARRIS

Blaze River forms the most important artery of navigation from the east of the Arctic Ocean. It flows through a low and level plain for about 300 miles between Lake Athabasca and Great Slave Lake. It is deep channel and average current of four miles an hour is broken only by a series of rapids between Fort Fitzgerald and Fort Smith, a distance of 16 miles, and situated at or near the boundary line between Alberta and the North West Territories.

It was raining very hard as we progressed down the river and looked as though it would never let up. We decided to look for a suitable landing place and wait for the rain to subside.

About twenty miles down the river we came to the first Buffalo Ranch cabins and this offered the shelter we needed badly. We tied up, and as the rainers were just at breakfast, they insisted we should come in, dry our clothes at the fire, and join in the meal. They treated us to a new dish, consisting of flapjacks and a very tasty syrup made from maple trees, made, they explained, by drawing the sap from the trees and boiling it until all impurities were removed. It was delicious.

Next day we met Billy, head buffalo ranger and an old-time homesteader in the Hythe area. With him was Hector Macdonald, son of Alex Macdonald, former residents of Grande Prairie. They had just returned from a trip by canoe down the Nelson, Liard, and Mackenzie rivers to Kitchikan, located on the Arctic coast a little east of the Mackenzie Delta, in connection with the government reindeer herds in that country.

We also met the cook and his partner from Wankarem, who had started out from Duvnagun to paddle the way to Bear Lake and to work themselves to their destination. They had one of their two boats swamped as the Jackfish Rapids and lost most of their valuable grub stake, but were laughing over it and willing to earn more any place.

About 10 a.m. the rain cleared a little and as the rangers' patrol boat was going down stream, they saw the camp, 40 miles below, with all the boats ashore, we decided to follow them through the channel.

Of course, this was a signal for "kicker" to back. The boats were forced with it, losing sight of their pilot boat as the other boats which passed us.

Whenever I think now of "outboard" motor, I vision of a motor standing up in the rear of a boat, and the hours before the cantankerous thing decides to go. Once started, however, they will run unerringly and we will have it like a gas and oil.

In Rough Water

The wind was light and the rain continued. It is surprising how much rain the Slave River can reach during a storm. Had it been possible to locate a good landing place on the banks we gladly would have landed and camped until the storm was over. The river was very high and the banks so full of swimmers that we could not land in one case and muddy to the knees and fifty feet deep in another.

We had been warned to watch for the White Rapids and were told that we could avoid them by making a lead certain inland with our shallow draft boats. However, we decided to wade over when we got to them. We were more concerned with hazards that were continually facing us than nobody took the trouble to warn us about.

From here down great outcroppings of granite show on the banks and even the centre of the river is bordered by boulders as big as a house jut up above the water, causing a great deal of trouble for the boats, and then behind on all sides. We decided to turn very much to the right, and I think they gave us sufficient thrill when we thought of what a close call we had.

Very soon we were to encounter the White Rapids, and we decided to go, and then slide in behind the described island and miss them. The meat packers, we passed, were in the island, and rain and wind, for three miles, we saw no more of the island, and then, sure enough, was a set of rapids that would have caused a seasoned mariner to hug the bank.

Caught in White Rapids

It was raining so hard that one entering in the river would be almost blinded. I don't understand, but it seems to me that the elements are always warring in some degree, and so they were then. The rain came down in torrents, and the wind blew it right into our faces. Faster and faster the current rushed along, and we began to feel a little anxiety when we learned that we were right in the middle of the rapids. Instead of to the side, as we had intended, there was nothing for it but to hold the rudder in place and steady as best we could between the boulders, trying to keep at least in deep water.

However, fortune was with us and finally we reached muskeg country. The wind-driven rain and splash from the rapids had soaked every inch of our open boats and we were forced to land somewhere for the night. Anything we searched the banks the next fifteen miles for a suitable place and then were obliged to pull in alongside a long drift pile in an eddy, where camping conditions were most unfavorable.

With wet blankets, wet clothes, wet grub and clouds of mosquitoes, we tried to make the best of it and by nightfall sufficient dry wood was found and split to keep a chery fire going by which to dry our clothes.

In there anything more delightful, when one is wet and cold and most quites very expensively, than a nice new sleeping bag, a stomach full of good food, and a pipe of tobacco? How quickly clothes dry on one and the mosquitoes don't seem to bother at all. When in men tell of their adventures and the past, great stories are told.

travellers to see what can be accomplished by pioneers in this industry. Here I met an oldtimer and homesteader from the Chukotka Lake district in the personage of Pat Murphy, a man who has been here since 1880. He has been with them ever since. He has been with them ever since. He has been with them ever since.

Pat was assigned the job of moving our stuff across to Fort Smith and while he was arranging cables, etc., to pull the boats out of the water onto a log pile, he was loading up with 27 tons of freight. Finally the order was given to "back into the water" and with its load pressed over the portage at a speed of 30 miles per hour.

as good English as "Jack" Nelson would have given me a similar course. The muskymen insisted on us joining in the dance and we entered into the spirit of the thing and enjoyed our self with them.

At last another tent, with the sides rolled up to give light and cool air, were some two dozen boats seated on the ground, their numbers divided into two teams or sides facing each other. Each side had a number of small objects, such as a piece of crumpled paper, and accompanying the rhythm of the tango, would rock back and forth shouting or humming a weird chant and making the most strenuous grimaces with their faces until one of the opposite side, selected by them as their leader, would clap his hands and point to who he had thought the paper was in.

CHRISTIANITY AND LABOR

Our modern problems of industry and of unemployment are forever lifted into the spiritual realm by the great and eloquent parables of the Laborers in the Vineyard. Here the owner of the vineyard, the Good Samaritan, is set forth as a type of the truly social citizen. The doctrine—well regarded in some quarters as a twentieth century economic heresy—that every man willing and able to work should be given an opportunity to earn a living for himself and his dependents is clearly set forth in a natural and inevitable corollary of the Savior's teaching that wealth is simply held by the individual in trust for living with all in set forth not only as the right of the weak but the primary responsibility of the strong. The ideal employer is profoundly touched by the tragic response of the Laborers in the Vineyard.

An occasional threshing machine is heard this week, but by next week threshing in this district will be general.

ALONG THE WAPITI

Our first touch of frost along the Wapiti was on Monday, September 5, in the night of September 4, and then only the cucumber and tomato vines were hard frosted.

Mr. N. J. McNeil, who is a farmer or tanner, says: "We do so, we so from April 10 till away in September."

We do not understand the ways of Government, but the Board of Agriculture, by giving a money's worth to the most successful farmer in 1928 and 1929 when needed most, as school opened Thursday, September 1, is a very good thing.

Particularly as it is a gift reward to the farmer, and not a loan, as the Government now does, and the school opened Thursday, September 1, is a very good thing.

LYMBURGH NEWS

The Rev. H. W. L. Harrison of the Anglican Church held service here on Sunday, September 4. The attendance was fairly good, but we are sure more could attend. The service was lovely.

The hymns were all old favorites and Mr. Harrison preached a very interesting and instructive sermon. His text was taken from the closing verse of the parable of the fig tree.
